Cinderella

based on the story by Charles Perrault

Once upon a time, there was gentleman who took for his second wife, a proud woman who had two daughters just like herself. The gentleman had a daughter of his own, but she was sweet and good. When the gentleman died, Cinderella was given the worst chores and made to wear rags. She slept on a pile of straw in the attic. She never complained to anyone. When her work was done, she would sit by the fire in the ashes. Her stepsisters began calling her Cinderella because she was always covered in cinders, or ashes.

Now it happened that the king's son invited everyone in the kingdom to a ball. The stepsisters were delighted and made more work for Cinderella with their constant demands for help trying on gowns and fixing their hair and make-up. All day long they admired themselves in the mirror. At last the day of the ball arrived, Cinderella watched her stepmother and stepsisters' carriage leave with tears in her eyes. They had not allowed her to attend the ball.

Her fairy godmother found her and said, "What is the matter, sweet child?" Cinderella told her about the ball. The fairy godmother said, "I'll see that you go, too!" She asked Cinderella to fetch a big pumpkin from the garden, six mice from the mousetraps, and three plump rats. When Cinderella returned with those things, the fairy godmother transformed the pumpkin into a golden carriage. The six mice changed into strong horses. The three rats became her driver and two footmen for the carriage. The fairy godmother said, "There, now, you may go to the ball!" Cinderella said, "Thank you kindly, but must I go in these rags?" The fairy godmother touched Cinderella with her wand and her rags changed into a gown of silver and gold. She wore a pair of tiny glass slippers on her feet. The fairy godmother warned Cinderella, "Do not stay one moment past midnight. When the clock strikes twelve, the magic will end." Cinderella promised to remember and left right away for the ball.

When Cinderella entered the ballroom, everyone stopped dancing to stare at her. They all thought she was a princess from a faraway land. The prince noticed her and asked her to dance. They danced the night away. Even when the feast was served, the prince did not eat. He just gazed at Cinderella. Cinderella was having such a marvelous time that she did not realize that it was getting late. When the clock began to strike midnight, she jumped up and ran out of the castle. In her hurry, she lost one of her glass slippers on the staircase. The prince picked it up and vowed to find her. The next day, he sent out a messenger with the shoe. Every maiden in the kingdom was to try on the tiny glass slipper. No one could be found who could wear the tiny slippers. Finally, the messenger arrived at Cinderella's home. Her tiny foot was a perfect fit for the slipper. Everyone was amazed when she pulled the matching slipper from her pocket. She married the prince the next day and they lived happily ever after!

Beauty and the Beast

Once upon a time, there lived a merchant's daughter who was so lovely and kind that everyone who knew her called her Beauty. She lived with her father and sisters. They were quite wealthy and had no worries. Then, the merchant received word that all of his ships and their rich cargo were lost in a storm. They were now completely penniless. Beauty comforted her father and pitched in to help however she could. Her sisters only whined and grumbled about all that they had lost. After much time had passed, the merchant received word that one of his ships had come into port. Hoping that his fortune had been restored, he set out towards the sea to meet the ship in the harbor. He asked his daughters what gift they would like him to bring them when he returned home. Beauty's sisters asked for gowns and jewels. Beauty asked only for a single rose since the garden was only used for growing food for her family now.

When the merchant reached the ship, he found the cargo ruined and worthless. He could not even afford to stay at the local inn. He was forced to return home in a blizzard. The merchant and his horse were soon hopelessly lost in the blinding wind and snow. Suddenly, in the moonlight, he saw a garden and a castle, untouched by the snow. He thought perhaps the master of the castle would grant him a place to keep warm. When he came to the doors, they opened before him. He entered the castle and found a roaring fire, some dry, warm clothes, and a hot meal on the dining table. He called out many times, but he never saw anyone. He ate and slept in great comfort.

The next morning, as he prepared to leave, he remembered his promise to his daughters. He could not bring them gowns or jewels, but he could bring a rose to Beauty. He plucked one rose from a bush and heard a terrible roar! "Is this how you repay my kindness? How dare you steal a rose from me?"

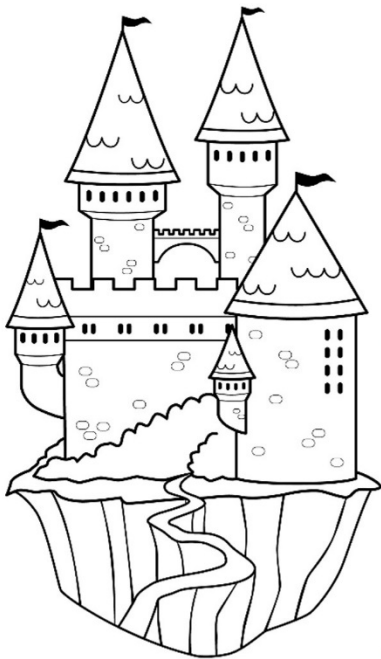

The merchant fell to his knees when he saw the Beast who roared at him. "I have only taken the rose as a gift for my daughter," he cried. The Beast replied, "I will spare your life if one of your daughters will come to live with me instead." The merchant agreed and went home to say good-bye to his daughters. When the merchant returned home with his sad tale, Beauty insisted that she go and live with the Beast. Nothing the merchant could say could change her mind.

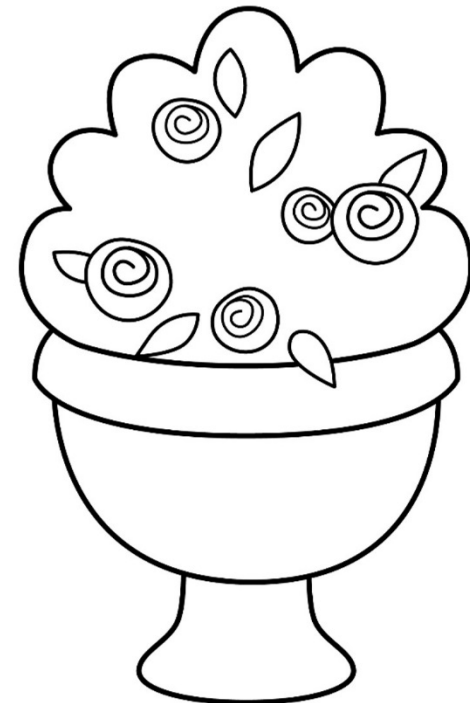

When the merchant and Beauty returned to the castle, Beauty was overcome by terror at the sight of the Beast. She bravely bid farewell to her father and entered the door. Beauty began her new life in the castle. She was free to wander and explore. The Beast provided her with beautiful gowns to wear. Each evening, the Beast appeared and joined Beauty for dinner. He was well-mannered. They had many wonderful conversations. One evening, the Beast quietly asked, "Beauty, will you marry me?" Beauty sighed sadly and said, "I am sorry, but I cannot marry you." This pattern continued day after day. Each evening it became more difficult for Beauty to refuse the Beast's proposal.

One morning, while exploring the castle, Beauty picked up a magical mirror. As she gazed into the mirror, her father appeared and he was gravely ill. That night, she told the Beast what she had seen in the mirror. The Beast saw how sad she looked and said, "I cannot refuse you anything. Take the mirror tomorrow and go to your father's bedside. Please remember that I love you and return to me before the moon is full." Beauty left at dawn the next day. Her father was overjoyed to see her. She was so busy tending to her father and rejoicing when his health returned that she did not notice the fullness of the moon.

One night, she awoke from a horrible nightmare. She gazed into the mirror to check on the Beast and saw him lying in the garden. He seemed to be dying. She raced to his side. When she found him, he looked dead. She cried and said, "Please don't leave me. I love you so!" Suddenly, before her eyes, he transformed into a handsome prince! Her love had broken the spell he was under. They were soon married and lived happily ever after.

Once upon a time, in a faraway kingdom, the queen was expecting her first child. She was sewing one day and pricked her finger. A drop of blood fell onto the snow-covered windowsill. She said, "Oh, how I wish that my child would have hair as black as night, lips as red as blood, and skin as white as snow." Later in the year, her beautiful daughter was born and the queen got everything she had wished for. Sadly, she died after the child was born. After some time, the king remarried. His new wife was beautiful, but she was also cold-hearted. Every day, the queen asked her mirror, "Mirror, mirror, on the wall, who is the fairest one of all?" Every day the mirror answered, "Of all the beauties that there are, You, O queen, are fairest by far." This pattern continued until one day not long after the king's death. The queen asked her mirror, "Mirror, mirror, on the wall, who is the fairest one of all?" The mirror answered, "You are fair, O queen, it's true, but Snow White is far fairer than you." The jealous queen became very angry!

The queen who had never cared for Snow White began to plot against her. She called one of the huntsmen and ordered him to take Snow White deep into the forest to kill her. The huntsman would not dare disobey the evil queen. He took Snow White for a walk in the forest. The young princess danced and sang in the woods. She was kind to the animals that they met on their path. He could not bring himself to harm her. He told Snow White to run far away and never return. The queen was a danger to her. He planned to lie to queen and tell her that a wild beast had killed Snow White.

Scared and horrified, Snow White ran through the forest stumbling over roots and being scratched by thorns. Finally, she came upon a little cottage down in a valley. She thought that perhaps she could find shelter and some food before going on farther. She timidly knocked on the door. When no one answered, she tiptoed inside. Everything in the cottage was very small! Exhausted from running, she fell asleep on a tiny bed.

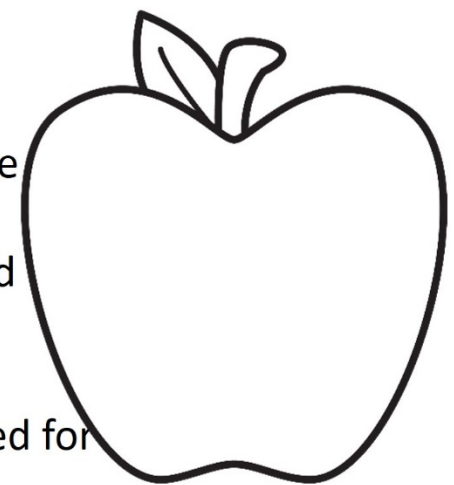

Later that day, the seven dwarves walked home from the mine where they worked. They were looking forward to a hearty meal and a good night's sleep. They stopped suddenly when they saw that the door to the cottage was wide open. Instead of a robber, they found a beautiful girl asleep in a bed. "Who can this be?" they asked one another. Snow White awoke and told them her sad tale. They were so impressed by her gentle spirit and her beauty that they invited her to stay with them. Snow White lovingly cared for the dwarves and they grew to love her more each moment. The next morning, they warned her not to speak to any strangers. She promised to be careful. The dwarves ventured off to work in the mine.

Thinking that Snow White was dead, the queen stood before her magic mirror and asked, "Mirror, mirror, on the wall, who is the fairest one of all?" She was shocked when the mirror answered, "Queen, you are a beauty rare, but Snow White living in the glen, with the seven little men, is a thousand times more fair." Enraged, the queen disguised herself as an old beggar woman in ragged clothes. Carefully, she dipped an apple in deadly poison and placed it in a basketful of bright, red apples. She traveled to the dwarves' cottage and found Snow White tending the flower garden. She said in a trembling voice, "Good day, sweet child, would you care for a juicy, ripe apple?" Snow White was unwilling to refuse the poor woman's gift. She said, "Thank you for your kindness." She took a bite of the poisoned fruit. She fell to the ground as if she were dead. The queen stood over her laughing wickedly. The dwarves came home for lunch at this time and found the evil queen. They chased her through the woods until she fell from a cliff into the river.

The dwarves laid the beautiful Snow White into a glass casket. They could not stand to bury her. One day a prince, riding through the forest, saw the casket gleaming in the sunlight. He gazed upon Snow White and could not resist giving her one kiss. Snow White awoke from the spell. The prince asked for her hand in marriage. She accepted and they lived happily ever after!

Once upon a time, in a faraway kingdom, the queen was expecting her first child. She was sewing one day and pricked her finger. A drop of blood fell onto the snow-covered windowsill. # Rapunzel

Based on the story by Jacob and Wilhelm Grimm

Once upon a time, there lived a poor man and woman who were soon to have their first child. Through their window they could see a lovely garden filled with flowers, herbs, and vegetables. The garden was surrounded by a high wall and no one dared to enter because the garden belonged to Mother Gothel, a dangerous sorceress. The poor woman would stand at the window and stare into the garden. She noticed a bed of beautiful rapunzel. It looked so tasty. All she could do was think about eating that rapunzel. Her husband, who worried about her health, finally agreed to climb over the wall and steal some rapunzel for her.

He had no sooner climbed the wall and picked a large bowl of rapunzel that he heard Mother Gothel shriek, "How dare you come here like a thief and steal my rapunzel? You will pay for this!" The man begged for mercy and explained that he needed the rapunzel to save his wife's life. She hadn't eaten for days. Mother Gothel calmed down and said, "I will allow you to take as much rapunzel as you wish under one condition. When your child is born, you will give it to me and I shall be the child's mother." In his fear, the man agreed to everything. When the baby was born several weeks later, Mother Gothel appeared, named the girl Rapunzel, and took her away.

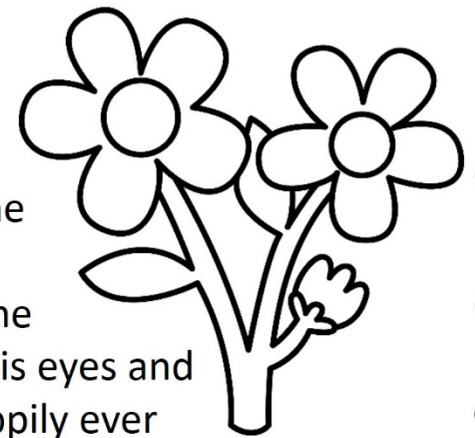

Rapunzel was well cared for and grew to be the most beautiful little girl in all the land. When she was twelve years old, Mother Gothel took her and locked her away in a tower in the forest. The tower had no door nor staircase. It had only one room with a window. Every day, Mother Gothel came to visit Rapunzel. She would stand at the base of the tower and call out, "Rapunzel, Rapunzel, let down your long hair." Rapunzel would untie her braids, wind her long hair around a hook, and throw her golden hair down to Mother Gothel.

Several years later, a prince happened to be riding through the forest. He heard a song so beautiful that he had to stop and listen. He tried to enter the tower and find out who was singing, but he could not locate a door. He was so enchanted by the song that he began to return to the forest every day to listen. One day, as he was standing behind a tree, Mother Gothel arrived and called, "Rapunzel, Rapunzel, let down your long hair." He watched in amazement as the flowing hair fell to the ground and Mother Gothel climbed up to the window. "Tomorrow, I will try to get in to see this girl called Rapunzel," he said to himself.

The prince returned the next day at dark, he tried to copy Mother Gothel's voice when he called out, "Rapunzel, Rapunzel, let down your long hair." The hair fell down, and the prince climbed to the tower's window. Rapunzel was terribly frightened when a strange man entered through her window. However, he talked to her in such a kind and friendly manner that she lost her fear of him. They talked through the night and soon were madly in love with each other. The prince begged Rapunzel to come away with him and be his wife. She sadly told him that she had no way to leave the tower. He agreed to return for her tomorrow with some silk that they could weave into a ladder.

The next day, when Mother Gothel returned, Rapunzel made a terrible mistake. She asked, "Why are you so much heavier than the prince who was here last night?" Mother Gothel was furious. In her anger, she grabbed Rapunzel's hair and cut it all off. She tied the hair to the hook and forced Rapunzel to climb down and live alone in the wilderness. That evening, the prince returned carrying the silk. He called to Rapunzel and Mother Gothel, who was waiting for him, threw down the hair. When the prince climbed in, Mother Gothel glared at him and said, "You have lost Rapunzel! You will never see her again." She threw him from the tower window. He fell into some bushes, but was blinded by some thorns. He wandered in the forest weeping and wailing for Rapunzel. Soon, he heard some familiar singing. Rapunzel cried when she saw him. Two of her tears fell into his eyes and restored his sight. They returned to his kingdom, were married, and lived happily ever after!
